Dornique “Nicki” Lynch is a visionary committed to excellence in business and has the passion to help others turn their ideas into income. She has successfully helped hundreds of people fulfill their purpose through her multimedia design firm and business development courses and seminars, teaching them how to transition from employee to employer.

Dornique’s career began early. At the age of 16, while still attending high school, a time when most teenagers work at fast food restaurants and retail stores, she held a corporate position as a computer programmer. Subsequently she gained over 15 years of Internet technology experience. She holds a degree in computer information systems with a concentration in marketing advertising from Georgia State University.

Dornique has managed multi-million dollar web projects with teams of web designers across the globe. Her credentials include serving as website design project manager for AT&T and Southern Company.

Given her early success, at age 27, Dornique founded Advancing Business Technologies, LLC (AdvBT), a web design and multimedia firm. With its unprecedented growth, she retired from corporate America to manage the company fulltime. AdvBT quickly grew into a unique design firm that offers services ranging from providing educational courses and personal coaching for those starting a business, to web and multimedia services for those interested in growing their existing business. With clients ranging from authors and motivational speakers to national corporations, Dornique has built a reputation of growing businesses and getting them onto the Internet quickly and professionally.
